VEGETINE

WILL CURE RHEUMATISM.

MR. ALBERT CROCKER, the well known druggist and apothecary, of Springvale, Me., advises every one troubled with Rheumatism to try VEGETINE.

READ HIS STATEMENT:

SPRINGVALE, ME., Oct. 12, 1876.

MR. H. R. STEVENS —

Dear Sir—Fifteen years ago had full 12 bottles taken with rheumatism, was unable to move until the next April. From that time until three years ago this fall I suffered everything with rheumatism. Sometimes there would be weeks at a time that I could not stoop once also, the attacks were quite severe. I suffer from everything that a man could. Over three years ago last spring I commenced taking VEGETINE and followed it up until I had taken seven bottles, has done me no rheumatism since that time. I always advise every one that is troubled with rheumatism to try VEGETINE, and not suffer for years as I have done. This statement is gratuitous as far as Mr. Stevens is concerned. Yours, etc.

ALBERT CROCKER.

Vegetine

HAS ENTIRELY CURED ME.

BOSTON, Oct. 1876.

MR. H. R. STEVENS —

Dear Sir—My daughter, after having a severe attack of Whooping Cough, was left in a feeble state of health. Having heard by a friend she tried the VEGETINE, and after using a few bottles was fully restored to health.

I have been a great sufferer from Rheumatism. I have taken several bottles of the VEGETINE for this complaint, and am happy to say it has entirely cured me. I have recommended the VEGETINE to others with the same good results. It is a great cleanser and purifier of the blood; it is pleasant to take and I can cheerfully recommend it.

JAMES MORSE, 304 Athens street.

Rheumatism is a Disease of the Blood.

The blood in this disease is found to contain an excess of Lactic Acid. VEGETINE acts by converting the blood from its diseased condition to a healthy circulation. VEGETINE regulates the bowels, which is very important in this complaint. One bottle of VEGETINE will give relief, but to effect a permanent cure it must be taken regularly, and may last for several bottles, especially in cases of long standing. VEGETINE is sold by all druggists. Try it, and your verdict will be the same as that of thousands before you, who say, "I never found anything which could do us good, from the use of VEGETINE, which is completed exclusively of Barks, Roots and Herbs."

"VEGETINE," says a Boston physician, "has no equal as a blood purifier. Hearing of its many wonderful cures, after all other remedies had failed, I visited the laboratory and convinced myself of its genuine merit. It is prepared from barks, roots and herbs, each of which is highly effective, and they are so compounded in such a manner as to produce results of a healthy character."

Vegetine.

NOTHING EQUAL TO IT.

SOUTH SALEM, MASS., Nov. 14, 1876.

MR. H. R. STEVENS —

Dear Sir—I have been troubled with Scrofula, Cancer and Liver Complaint for three years, and never did find any good until I commenced using the Vegetine. It is getting along first-rate, and still using the Vegetine. I consider there is nothing equal to Vegetine as a complaint. Can't heartily recommend it to everybody. Yours truly,

THURSDAY, SEPT 27 1877

AN HUMBLE APPEAL.

[From the New York Times, Sept. 24.]

Conciliation is an excellent thing. Everybody, from the child who wants candy to the politician who wants a post office, desires to be conciliated. It is especially desirable that a Mr Hayes, in his novel and rising way, calls "our whole country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Maine to Texas," should be in a chronic state of conciliation. When therefore it becomes the duty of the conscientious journalist to seemingly oppose any plan of general conciliation, the act is a thankless and painful one. Nevertheless there are still a few sincere, even if mistaken people who will perhaps sympathize with a kind though earnest protest against the adoption of the Confederate flag in the place of the Stars and Stripes.

There is no doubt that our Southern brethren—who, as Mr Hayes beautifully says, fought bravely in support of their conviction—do not look with such fervor at or upon the flag which Grant's soldiers—who in their turn may possibly have to fight for their so-called principle—hoisted over the Capitol at Richmond. It is unfortunate that the feelings of our Southern brethren were irritated by the conduct of those who carried the Stars and Stripes, and it is natural that they should fail to feel an enthusiastic love for that period too obtrusive by half. On the other hand, they of course still feel a natural attachment for the flag of the Republic. Once it symbolized their short lived nationality and is endeared by the memories of the suffrages and sacrifices that were made in its behalf. That a Southerner should love the Confederate flag more than the flag of the Union is what every intelligent man might expect, and is hereby cheerfully conceded.

There is moreover no doubt that the chief object of every man, woman, and child now living, should be the conciliation of the South. It is his object that impels the President to take his Cabinet on a ball tour over the Southern circuit, and which makes the eminent statesmen in making humorous speeches at the risk of costing a gloom over the entire North, and of affording their discontented hearers evidence upon which to set aside at some future day their first well and test nuts. When therefore it is proposed to substitute the Confederate for the Federal flag in order to conciliate the South, one more difficult for any one who objects to the proposal to clear himself of the charge of narrow minded, partisan malignity, combined with arson and horse stealing. That this proposal will meet with the enthusiastic support of our Southern brethren cannot be doubted. Their feeling as to this matter was shown the other day when Mr Hayes was publicly received at Atlanta by a number of military companies, none of which carried the Federal flag throughout of them displayed a banner bearing in its centre a painting of the Confederate flag surrounded by stars. If we give back to the Deighed Cousins old banner, the South will unquestionably be tremendously conciliated.

Still as Mr Hayes before showed at Atlanta the man who honestly fought for the Stars and Stripes ought to be expected for the relaxation to what the thought wrong. If this is true, it follows that the feelings and prejudices of the friends of the old Union might with propriety be treated with some consideration by the victorious South. Those who oppose the adoption of the Confederate flag base their opposition upon its ground and appeal to the generosity of the South. Of course the South owes no debt of gratitude to the Union or even to President Hayes. As Mr Hill did on Friday last "the President has not accomplished the redemption of the State of South Carolina and the State of Louisiana by any favor to the South. * * He has accomplished so much for the pacification of the country by doing simply what it was his duty to do and what his predecessors have failed to do." And as Gov Hampton said on the same occasion, the President is simply carrying out the policy for twelve years advocated by the Democratic Party. In spite of Mr Hayes' policy two of the North are only unprofitable servants of the South and have done only what it was our duty to do. If not, then the gratitude of our Southern brethren to which we can appeal but solely their generosity. Will they not consent, while taking everything else to spare us the ridiculous old flag which we are still silly enough to cherish.

The substantial fruits of victory, that is to say, conciliation ought to be satisfactory to the South. The control of all the Southern States is once more in the hand of the Confederates. The enfranchisement negro, who our ill recently assumed the air of a free citizen, and actually went to the polls and voted the Republican ticket, has been nullified by the federal officials, but in that further importance of that kind will be perpetrated at his own peril and that a brutal soldiery will no longer be employed to protect him. Likewise, the white Southerner who so far forgot the land of his birth as to vote with the Republican Party has been led to see the folly of his course. Thus, there is once more a really solid South, unalloyed by Republicans, whether black or white, and this solid South holds the balance of power, and thus rules the entire Union. If Mr Hayes' predecessors had done their duty as Mr Hill defines it, and had surrendered to the Southern Confederacy, our Southern brethren would have ruled over only half the continent. As it now is we have, in the interests of conciliation, given them the control of the whole country, and surely they ought to be satisfied easily conciliated without exciting the surrender of our flag.

If it is proper for a mere newspaper to make a suggestion to the President, his attention might be drawn to the propriety of varying his speeches by humbly entreating the South to spare us our old flag. Let him offer in the interest of conciliation, to pay the Confederate debt, to build the Southern Pacific Railroad, and to appoint none but Southern statesmen to office, and then let him appeal to his Southern audiences to postpone for a few years the formal adoption of the flag of the Confederacy. It would be a graceful act for the South to leave us the old flag until the last of GRANT'S and SHERMAN'S soldiers are under the sod. Since the President himself admits that these veterans were brave and honest, why should we not save a little slice—a few crumbs, so to speak—of conciliation for them, instead of lavishing all the conciliation now available upon the South? Of course this plea for the old flag will be called partisan, malignant, and brutal but such epithets will be unjust. It is not dictated by a foolish hatred of all Southerners, or a narrow prejudice against surrendering the fruits of a hard-won and costly victory. Hopeless as it doubtless is it is an humble effort to induce the victorious South to respect for a few years longer a foolish though perhaps natural fondness for the flag of Saratoga, New-Orleans, and Gettysburg.

THE MEANING OF IT

[From the Chicago Inter Ocean.]

Why do the people of the South receive the President so enthusiastically?

Is it because they believe him determined to be just in the administration of his high office, or is it because they look upon him as a concession to certain political ideas heretofore held by them, and for which they have fought pertinaciously the many years? Is it because he announces that he will be the President of the whole people or because they look upon him as having struck down Packard and Chamberlin, and lifted up Hampton and Nicholls that they cheer so vociferously? If the former, the exhibition is encouraging, if the latter, the spirit is not commendable, and not one to be dispensed upon.

At the New Jersey Democratic Convention held on Wednesday last, a resolution was adopted congratulating the President not for any kind act of statesmanship he had originate, but because he had, in the word of the Convention, "found it necessary to adopt the Democratic policy of local self government."

In every Democratic newspaper we find that the praise showered upon the President is based solely on the alleged ground that he has thus adopted some of the cardinal principles of Republicanism, and, as Tadsome of the earlier principles of Democracy in their place. It is in this spirit, and for this reason, that the Little scarred Confederate, as they are called in the dispatch, welcome the President so warmly, that they will meet not so much a living, and not one, but Republicans can feel with much pride or gratification. If there is anything in the word that rouses the enthusiasm of a political party in this country it is the access to the ranks of a prominent and influential person from the ranks of its opposing organization. That triumph now is enough to compel wild with joy, and if it is as it is, that has seized possession of the South we wouldn't give much for the demonstrations that greet the President there.

For this old notion of State sovereignty (disguised now under the more acceptable appellation of local self government) cannot avenged unresisted to be front again in this country. It will be opposed and fought, and overthrown, and the unfortunate thing about the matter is that it should be allowed to be, and blossom, and once more gain strength sufficient to defy the national authority under such disguises as it now is. It which it now wears and by virtue of which it advances to apparent victory.

MASSACHUSETTS

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

As for the platform adopted at Worcester, it will not commend any very warm enthusiasm. It is a simple incontrovertible fact that nine-tenths of the Republicans of Massachusetts believe in the President's civil service order. And because the platform carefully leaves out of its way to indorse this order, and demand even more of the same sort, it will not necessarily increase the vigor with which the men who have faith in it will labor. There are those who about themselves, for years, over the fact that Massachusetts has been linked with the rest of Republican states. In that regard, well and when it is perhaps good to that it has kept pace and gone behind other States in its majorities. The editorial would have been a good deal better if it had been a little bolder. Certainly nobody votes for Mr Hayes who does not swear to every plank in the platform. Mr Gaston will do as well as any as well brush up the common forms again.

CONFLICTING TESTIMONY

I need not shout myself hoarse in order to tell great truths, in making a speech about the happiness and peace we are now enjoying in all sections of the Union.—President Hayes at Louisville.

And now, my colored friends, let me say another thing. We have been trying for the last six months, and in my opinion for no six months since the war has there been so few outrages and violations of your rights, person and property as in the last six months.—Gov. Chamberlain at Columbia.

We are able now without fear to trust to every part of this country the management of its domestic institutions.—President Hayes at Louisville.

[Letter from Gov. Nicholls of Louisiana, published this week.]

Clearly there is a reign of terror in Pike and the surrounding counties of Mississippi and Gov. Stone is displaying in this respect the same apathy that silenced the country in connection with the Dhalab tragedy. The local newspapers are beginning to fill up with accounts of armed bodies of men riding masked through the neighborhood depriving citizens from their homes, defying the public officers and paralyzing the law. Whole communities are held in fear, and all pretense of well regulated society is destroyed. Murder and burning are the forms of vengeance commonly inflicted on those who offend the outlaws and as for almost absolute immunity has been enjoyed by them through the helplessness of law abiding people on the one hand and the inexplicable quiescence of the Government on the other.

GOD FORBID

[From the Providence (R. I.) Journal.]

Much that the President says to his Southern auditors will meet the hearty approval of patriots everywhere. But there will be some who yet must trace a line between treason and loyalty—between fighting to destroy a government and fighting to sustain it. There are those who believe that it was to the "special credit" of the loyal arms—of the patriotic soldiers of whom the President was a valiant leader—that "the war turned out as it did." We hope and believe it is true that we are all embarked upon the same voyage, upon the same ship, under the same old flag. But the voyage, the ship, the dear old flag, have been in mortal peril, and, if we neglect the lessons of history, may be again. "Shall we quit fighting?" exclaims the President. Yes, indeed, but God forbid that we should forget why we fought.

Having made a splurge over the banqueting jollification which was so shockingly out of place as a part of the exercises of dedicating a Soldiers' Monument, the Boston papers, according to their usual custom, are growling over the bills for the feasting. The habit of inviting guests to entertainment and then opening a public squabble over the expense, has become characteristic of Boston, and President Grant very properly declined an invitation thither because of the quarrelling over the cost of a former visit.

The N. Y. Tribune, in a synopsis of the President's tour in the South, naively remarks: "In East Tennessee, which was loyal during the war, and has been Republican since its close, the President is received with less enthusiasm than in the old Rebel sections." Not entirely strange.

THE VIRGINIA DOCTRINE.

A friend has sent us a copy of the Suffolk, Virginia, Herald of Sept. 19, from which we extract the following editorial paragraphs:

The Norfolk Day Book is no longer a Republican paper, but will now its endeavors for the building up of the local interests of the cities by the sea. Mr. Harry Burton is associated with the paper, and doubtless will instill new life in its columns. We welcome its editors in their new determination, and wish it the success its ante bellum record entitles it to. Virginia ought to have no Republican newspaper in her borders; the day is past for such.

The Norfolk Day Book, is under the impression that the sentiment in the North will soon turn and prove favorable to paying the South for her emancipated slaves. We see no reason why Congress should not take this matter up at an early day and thus do an act of justice to the South which ought to have been done long since. Slaves were property, as as such we ought to receive their value in government funds as the government deposited us of them—Pay the South their value, and the North is bound to feel the benign influence of such an act. There are many men, women and children in the South to-day, who would be comparatively well off, but for the liberation of this property. We never wish to see slavery instituted again, but want their worth in money in our midst.

Without any fault of yours, or any fault of mine or of any one of this great audience slavery existed in this country. The colored man was here not by his own voluntary action, it was the misfortune of his fathers. I think it is safe to say that it was by the crime of your fathers that he was here. He was here, however, and two of the two sections differed about what should be done with him. Both sides freely undertook to settle the question by that last final means or arbitration—force of arms. You here in duty bound, the Confederate side, and fought bravely, risked your lives heroically in behalf of your convictions. And only any true man anywhere fail to respect the man who risks his life for his convictions. [Prolonged applause.]—President Hayes to the citizens of Georgia.

There can be but one honest interpretation of this language namely, that the man who fought to uphold the right of property in slaves is just as patriotic and noble in his convictions as the man who fought for freedom and civil rights. And the logical sequence of that is that the heroic slave driver should be paid for his lost property and apologized to for the trespass which the national government committed upon the rights of the institution. It will be observed that we are progressing.—Boston Traveller.

We advise the Boston Journal to be cautious in its denunciation of the Southern sub-rosa schemes as it will probably be enthusiastically indorsing several of them within a year as essential to "reconciliation." If the Journal does not understand that all fables for the important element of the "pacification policy," it ought to get posted up so as to prepare arguments in their favor.

Van Zandt has been loitering again, according to the paragraph in the Inter Ocean.

One of the most touching spectacles on the Southern trip was to see Van Zandt of Rhode Island and kissing McCrary of Kentucky. The latter less plump, and the corners of his mouth hung rather justly, the job was not a profitable one, but Van Zandt never flesh-tries over trifles when called upon to do kindly act. He was bound to conciliate McCrary, too, or no go.

The Frankfort (Kentucky) Yeoman doesn't want President Hayes to mistake the attitude of Kentucky in the welcome she gave him. According to the Yeoman, "Kentucky is ready to tell him that she scorns the means by which he became ruler of the people and deprecates the act of his usurpation."

The President's party arrived at Washington Wednesday night from their Southern tour.

IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENT IN

Hot Air Furnaces.

Kohler's Patent Wrought Iron Double Radiating Hot Air Furnace.

This Furnace was first made in Boston and so successful has been its operation that over 400 are now in use in Boston and vicinity. Some of the advantages of this Furnace are the large amount of its radiating surface and the close proximity of the plates to the fire, the perfect distribution of cold air to every part of the Furnace, the two distinct hot air chambers, enabling the rooms to be heated equally as well at a distance as near the furnace, the joints are all steam tight so that no cement being used in its construction to crack or cleaning, there being no place for the dust to settle, as they fall directly back into the ash pit, the piping arrangement, the water pan, the best of fire pots are all in keeping with the Furnace and will be found on careful examination. Any one in want of a first class heater is invited to call and look this Furnace over, as we shall be pleased to show it whether you buy or not.

NOW LET JEFF DAVIS SPEAK

The Vice-President of the Confederacy is delighted with the Conciliation Policy

WASHINGTON Sept 26th Hon A. H Stephens who arrived last night, speaks of President Hayes' reception at the South as quite enthusiastic as was ever accorded a President in any part of the Union as a great tribute to a President whose administration has been in accordance with the constitutional principles of Home Rule. Mr Stephens gives entire support and approbation to the President's course, and says he has done more for the pacification of the country than Tilden could have done.

He Thinks a Rebel on the Supreme Bench would be very Soothing

He also said a further step could be made in that direction by the appointment of a representative Southern man to fill the vacancy in the Supreme Court, and urges the name of Herschel V Johnson as one who would give almost universal satisfaction at the South and be cordially endorsed by three fourths of the Northern Democracy.

factory to all parties. Mr Forster called the yeas and nays.

The chair ruled as this convention is three times as large as the State Assembly it required 30 to support the call before they could be ordered. Less than 30 rising the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr Forester moved that the name of Mr. Tremaine be substituted for Platt. The previous question was then ordered by a viva voce vote.

Conkling's Motion Carried

The Chair stated the question to be upon Mr Conkling's motion to substitute Platt's name for his own as chairman, on which yeas and nays were ordered. The roll being called, yeas 411, nays 110, so that the motion prevailed and Thomas C. Platt was chosen permanent Chairman. On resuming the chair, amid applause Mr Platt returned thanks to the convention and then called for the report of the Committee on Resolutions.

Mr Conkling, chairman of that committee reported and did that he his friend Charles F Smith of Albany, was familiar with the proceedings of the resolutions (laughter) they had kindly offered to read the platform which had been unanimously adopted (laughter and applause)

The Platform

Mr Smith was called to the platform and read the resolutions as follows

The Republicans of New York, true to the achievements of an unequalled history and faithful to the demands of an imperiled nation in make the following declaration

The office of the Government is to conserve order peace and safety and to protect every citizen in the enjoyment of every right implied by the Constitution and the laws. Unity and fraternal relations in all States and sections and between all State and National governments of the first and highest importance, and the Republican party of New York will heartily support every measure, authorized by law, adapted to establishing and maintaining commercial and industrial prosperity and tranquillity, fidelity and obedience to lawful authority.

The Constitution ordains that the United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican form of Government. The only Republican form of Government known to the Constitution of any American State, is a Government chosen by the people. The question whether a State has a right to employ military force to protect lawful state authority against domestic violence is, the Constitution committed to his decision and to his responsibility. Taking sole sue with any decision of this kind which has been made by the National Executive in respect to the employment of troops and expressing no opinion in regard to such decisions and proceedings employed in any instance we cherish the hope that the action taken in relation to the southern states will result in peace fraternity and justice, and no part of the Republicans of New York conducive to its good effects shall be withheld.

We insist on purity, frugality and efficiency in every branch of the public service National and State, and to that end we hold these requirements and practice justly.

No office should exist 2nd Compensation for official service should be fair and just but in no case excessive. 3rd Patronage and no other should hold public trust. In every difficult high office should be required the ability and to the whole of the official duties. No official or office holder should be appointed or retained or partisan assessments or interference in any way with his official status or action and plain laws should forbid all attempts to make or enforce such assessments or to control or abridge in any respect the duty of a free man in political action will be in the country by those to all voters alike.

In connection with this subject we recur with satisfaction to the portion of the letter of acceptance of Mr Hayes which he declares that "the founders of our government intended that the officer should be secure in his tenure as long as his personal character remained unstained and the performance of his duties satisfactory." In furtherance of this view we commend as worthy of consideration legislation making officers secure in a limited fixed tenure and subject to removal only as officers under the State laws are removable in this State on charge to be regularly and openly preferred and adjudged.

We hold honest service or labor the best and highest exertion for American citizenship. The claims of labor for others which offer the (illegible) of our private employers are fully entitled to any citizen can be to absolute freedom in all political civil or religious affairs. They owe the full service due to the State and no nothing more. The Constitution of the United States and of the State of New York, and the laws thereof establish equal rights for all citizens and all voters, and we deprecate as unwarrantable and hurtful all attempts by employers whether corporations, capital or political power, to encroach upon or coerce others in the enjoyment of any of their rights or the exercise of any of the duties of citizenship.

In the State of New York the whole number of National office-holders, including clerks and subordinates of every degree, is 7,465, that is one national official or subordinate to 1,027 voters. Of the State county and town officials there are in this State 33,013, that is one State county and town official to every 55 voters. When the potential functions of local officers are taken into account, their influence to the citizen and their power over his property taxes and interest in their relative influence becomes even greater than the numbers indicate. The exclusion of public servants from political action, would deprive a great body of our fellow citizens. The laws make no such exclusion and we deem as an imputation upon the people of New York that they are or have been dominated by the National subordinate official, and we can conceive of no condition of affairs short of the extinction of manhood, and patriotism in which a Postmaster or a clerk could subdue to his partisan will 152 thousand electors or exert any other influence beyond such as his character might give him.

5th. The public faith, honest industry and the general prosperity, demand a sound currency of coin, and paper convertible into coin and the already near approach to specie payments enforces the wisdom and duty of faithfully pursuing the necessary steps to a full resumption within the time now fixed by law.

6th. We oppose any further land grants or subsidies to corporations and monopolies, and hold that the public domain should be reserved for free homes for industrious settlers.

7th. We regard with alarm and disapprove the demands coming from promoters of various schemes that appropriations and grants shall be made, and the National credit used to carry on various works, local and sectional in character, and not of urgent National importance. New York, with one-tenth of the population, is the source of about one quarter of all National revenues, and we call upon the burdened tax-payers of this State to watch and defeat all attempts, however specious, to increase the public debt, or to obtain their money for remote and questionable purposes, which if feasible appeal to State action and private enterprise. Such attempts are the more indefensible when sustained by votes of section minorities, adding to the burdens of the more heavily taxed portions of our country.

[We defer to our next issue the remaining resolutions which treat of State policies and scathingly arraign the Democratic party. Ed.]

Geo Wm Curtis Demands an Explicit Indorsement of the Southern and Civil Service Policies

When the reading was completed Geo. Wm. Curtis moved to amend, the first sections by a substitute. Having been called to the platform amid great applause he read it as follows

The lawful title of Rutherford B. Hayes to the Presidency is as clear and perfect as that of George Washington. We gladly recognize his eminent patriotism, proved in the field and in civil life. We heartily commend his efforts in the permanent pacification of the Southern section of the Union and for the correction of the evils and abuses in the civil service, as strictly conforming to his own pledges and to the declarations of the convention that nominated him, and as tending to the promotion of the public welfare. Recognizing that the work is but begun, we shall hail with satisfaction its prompt and vigorous prosecution in which the President may confidently rely upon the cordial support of the country.

The Issue Joined—A Lively Discussion.

Mr. Curtis addressed the Convention at some length and with great earnestness insisting that it was their duty to commend the President's efforts, that he was carrying out the pledges of the Cincinnati and Saratoga platforms, that without a shadow of surrender of Republican principles he had been welcomed in the old slave States of Georgia and Tennessee, while Massachusetts proclaimed approval and Maryland echoed Massachusetts. He declared that the failure to indorse the President would be doing the party a foul wrong and shake the confidence of the people.

Hon Lyman Tremaine Opposes Indorsement

After the subsidence of long continued applause following Mr Curtis' speech Hon Lyman Tremaine, who was too feeble to stand spoke from a sitting position on the platform against the amendment. The general point of his argument was that while there was to be no abandonment of the cherished Republican principles, no lowering of the flag under which the party had so often marched to battle and victory (applause) there was no necessity for introducing the fire brand on points in regard to which there are such radical differences of opinion. It was not wise to thrust down the throat of Republicans who differ and doubt declarations approving of method which they honestly do not believe in. Remember, Geo Wm Curtis, Mr Tremaine, remember that milk is for babes and meat is for strong men. (Subdued laughter.)

A Recess Taken

Mr Rothschild of Broome, at the urgency of his question was such that it was deemed not and he would therefore move a recess for one hour. (Cries of no, no!) He insisted that the proposition should be fully discussed and therefore moved adjourn till 7 o'clock which was carried.

Mr Kellogan of Kings County proposed the endorsement of the President of the World of Allegany, and Hotchkiss of Onondaga spoke.

Mr Platt member of the Resolutions Committee said that if the President had done what one, he to have believed he should be commended, if he had done what we had not expected and what one, I not to have been done then we should condemn him.

Conkling Takes the Floor

After some further discussion Mr Conkling rose and said he had been requested by the Committee on Resolutions to speak. When he had spoke they wished to hear on the other side. He would address the Convention and then move the previous question.

Mr Forster moved to amend the resolution by adding one offered by him at the morning session relating to the State convention at Saratoga. Mr Conkling suggested that it was covered by the resolution.

Forster asked to have an opportunity to offer his resolution before the previous question was moved.

Conkling said the gentleman could have with him to expect understanding that which he had publicly stated.

Curtis Again

Here he again calls for Curtis being received, he rose and repeated the charge and declared that he had cast a fire brand into the Convention. The fire brand was thrown in here by those who brought in question the policy of the administration and he proved it.

Conkling Closes the Debate

Senator Conkling then took the platform and made a very elegant speech, towards the close of which he referred directly to Curtis and the article published in his paper which he denounced as the bitterest thrust that provoked a storm of hisses mingled with applause. Finally he argued the adoption of the platform just as reported and moved the previous question, which was ordered. The question was stated on Curtis's amendment and Curtis called for the yeas and nays.

The Indorsement Resolution Voted down by more than two to one

The question was put by the Chair, and without counting the negative vote which was largely in the majority it was announced that the amendment appeared to be lost. The yeas and nays were again called for and ordered.

The roll was called resulting yeas 100, nays 225, and so the amendment was lost and the platform was then adopted viva voce with but a dissenting vote.

Forster moved three cheers for the State Convention but it was lost. A motion was made to a journ and lost. Mr. Kingsley of Albany moved to proceed to the nomination of the State ticket which was carried. After the selection of a State Committee, nominations for the Congressional districts were resolved that the nominations for candidates on the state ticket be now by acclamation.

The State Ticket to be Nominated to-day

Mr Pinkney of New York moved Hamilton Fish for Secretary of State but this gentleman rose and declined. The Convention then adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow when the ticket will be nominated.

Political Bitterness

In remote provincial districts, however, no idea can be formed abroad of the bitterness already arising between political parties. They are like two hostile nations confronting each other and ready to come to blows. Never before did the painful animosity attain the intensity to which it has been growing since the 16th of May.

His lastfield of labor was at the Corinna Academy, which he had taken charge of, with a determination to make it second to none in the State, and would without doubt have been successful therein, but he was prostrated last winter with suffusion of the pleura, from which he has since been confined to his bed, undergoing several very painful surgical operations and suffering extremely, but always without a murmer or even a word of impatience or complaint. In his death, not only his family but his town and the Methodist church of that place of which he was a devoted member, sustain a great loss. A good man has departed.

THE LAST OF THE SEASON

I

There could be no doubt as to the fact. She drove by me in the Park, and bowed—an actual bonafide bow. For several months I had endeavored to catch her eye and saw she had grac ously inclined her head and smiled upon me sweetly as I leaned airily on a Park railing. I glanced round to see whether any one was cavvying me, and felt disappointed because my good fortune had been witnessed only by a diminutive street boy and an unsympathetic lite guardsman. But no matter, she had bowed and I was triumphant

She was neither young, beautiful, nor sylph-like As far as I knew, she was neither wealthy nor witty. Her fascination lay in her entourage, in a word, she was an society

My step was light and my pulses bounded with honest pride as I strutted to the Club to calm my bubbling spirits with a cigar Entering the vestibule, I was handed a letter, or rather a sheet of note paper, so fashioned as to serve as letter and envelope in one Its ends were open, and it carried a half-penny stamp. The address was correct—"P Killjoy, Esq., Germaine Club, St James street" But who could my parsimonious correspondent be?

I tore open the missive, and glanced at the writing

"Holy Blue!" I cried, and sank into the had porter's seat "This is too sudden" The note paper fell from my fingers to the tilted floor, and a host of fond antique dames crowded upon my brain There it lay, my ruin staring into society, until I picked it up, to go more to gaze upon its enchanting but scratchy characters

DOWAGER VISCOUNTESS DAWLISH
At Home
4 to 7
To meet the Patagonian Ambassador
96 Park street July 20

Meet the Patagonian Ambassador to-morrow, drink tea and eat strawberries from 10 o'clock till 8? Not a particular inviting way of spending an afternoon, perhaps, but then I had never met a Patagonian

The arrival of these Antipodean aliens had given a vast fillip to the languishing season The end of all things fashionable was at hand The Tottenham Harrow match had been played, Patti had sung for her benefit at Covent Garden, right honorable members were growling on mid-sectional benches and all of the work, panting for a breeze or more than indeed, the Patagonians were leaving town when the Patagonians took up their abode at the Alexandra Hotel, and become the heroes of the fortnight But upon the first appearance of these solid savages, even the faded brightened up for one last flicker, and half a dozen afternoons and three garden parties were given in order that certain ladies might keep up their reputation as successful stalkers of lion

Not the least conspicuous among these hunters was the lady who bowed to me in the Park

Sabina Viscountess Dawlish was an exemplary woman, who having achieved a position after years of persistent fighting, was not likely to loose it through lack of energy or tact A quarter of a century ago she had been married to an impecunious peer, who started a stud with her money and gallop d into bankruptcy Court in due course The daughter of a cotton-spinner and the wife of a Viscount, Sabina was not likely to forget what was due to her dishevelled dignity She was quietly ignored at first by the great ladies of society and in her turn she fiercely snubbed those unfortunates who courted her smiles But she was young and intelligence is scarce and what was worth both put together good taste She carried herself modestly and demurely before the women but she soon discovered a kindred spirit and never thrilled but in her own boudoir In course of time she was looked upon as an affable and harmless little person who would oblige a friend, keep a secret and never encourage a husband or a son by idle or premeditated compliments To the men she was always sympathetic friend, artful and successful flatterer, who was overreads with advice, the result of a good memory and better tact She knew stated plots in little dinners of eight at a round table and took care that the dull ness of High Life was always enlivened by the presence and conversation of with brilliants of an inferior sphere An Attorney-General if sufficiently engaging, taught her art at Parkscrew, the first prime knew how it, and even the chapter of an naughty comedy from the French, would occasionally half dismay and be glad to assume. These dinners became successes The great ladies knew that if they dined with Sabina they would be amused and flattered by the Bohemians without running the slight risk of encountering the females of the kind—a school some and very natural horror of which exists in the patrician breast. Sabina Viscountess Dawlish became popular, presently popular, and was finally accepted as a partner in shareholder in the profits and the joys which an established position in the "fashionable world" affords

We of the Germain know all about lady Dawlish, how she had been left a widow without even the melancholy satisfaction of being mother to a peer, how her three daughters were still unmarried, though as their intimate friends asserted, they were old enough and willing When we inherited the story about the Honorable Sybil and the young Marquis of Tedbington, who though scarcely a member of the Germain was in society, there wasn't one who did not affect to know the private doings of every peer in society

It was just at the commencement of the season, some time in April, I think, that I was introduced to Lady Dawlish Young Temple, of the Grenadiers, presented me at Lord's, accident, I mean I confess it was in the vestibule at Covent Garden, on the night of Albani's first appearance this year, and there was a terrible crush inside for I was raining Niagara without I was making my way through the crowd when Lady Dawlish's carriage stops the way, and I was spotted from the Court The poor lady and two of her daughters were jammed in by the crowd unable to reach the brougham, and certain that in a few seconds the vehicle would be ordered on by the Police, not to return for at least three-quarters of an hour

I say, Killjoy" and a man I knew slightly tipped me on the shoulder, do me a favor"

I was willing, of course,

"Give your arm to Miss Dawlish, and put her through the crowd. Aunt let me introduce Mr Killjoy—Lady Dawlish"

She bowed, so did the daughters Charlie Temple marched away with a lady on each arm, and I followed escorting a third. The carriage was reached just as the coachman was ordered to drive on by the official and I was rewarded by three slight bows There was nothing very impressive or winning about these bows, but they were distinctly symptoms of grateful recognition, on the part of these aristocrats, of my prompt and chivalrous courtesy

"Much obliged," said Temple curtly. "Have a weed?"

"Thanks," I answered "I didn't know you were related to the Dawlishes"

"Oh for yes. Ta ta" And he jumped into hansom and vanished

I must confess that, although I have had occasion to admire and be grateful to Lieutenant and Captain Charles Walsingham Temple his behavior on that occasion did not inspire me with many symptoms of violent regard. I had been treated just like a play-bill—I was wanted, I was used, I was thrown aside Two nights afterwards I tried to catch Lady Dawlish's eye, but she didn't or wouldn't see me. I met her at a flower-show in Regent's Park, but never a glance did I get; at Lord's I passed her carriage three times—once I am certain she looked at me—she took me for somebody else, very possibly; but she recollected in time, and turned aside to some lobster salad. So the season sped on, and I, who am considered an acquisition in Kensington and a parti in Bayswater, was ignored and snubbed in Mayfair.

But at last, at the end of the season, I am rewarded with a smiles at an afternoon party. No doubt she had failed to notice me—perhaps she is short-sighted. To be sure she is; does her lady ship not carry a gold-rimmed place-nez on the arch of her Roman nose?

Just as I am leaving the Club to return to my rooms to dress for the evening old Thomas, a half-pay Indian officer, stops me.

"Will you make the fourth in a rubber to-morrow afternoon at four, Killjoy?"

"No," answer I, trying to impart a tone of regret into my voice. "No. I'm engaged; promised to go Lady Dawlish's. Very sorry!"

"A-a-ah!" muttered my friend, and he chuckled to his idiotic old self. "She's at it again this year, eh! But, by the way, you are a distinguished novelist—hm! Ah! well, don't let them flatter you too much, or you'll be married before you get a shot at the grouse"

Could it be true? I burned for literary fame as one of the paths toward social distinction. Was it possible that that awful novel which had cost me a year to write, £200 to publish, and after the criticisms appeared, as many sleepless nights through which to repent—could these three much maligned volumes be appreciated by one individual, and that individual the aesthetic Lady Dawlish?

Delicious thought! and revelled in it

II

Five o'clock, and no Patagonians!

I could see that the generally expressionless countenance of Lady Dawlish was puckered with anxiety, although her manner was calm, though her eyes constantly wandered to the door even when she was smiling to a compliment from a Bulgarian Christian who had come to London for English sympathy and sovereigns

The Honorable Sybil was mildly flirting with an Austrian attaché in the back drawing-room, Charlie Temple was yawning on a settee near the off-door, and I, not knowing a soul, was standing still, and defiant again the wall trying to look bored, but in reality marking the minutes and endeavoring to catch the date of every moment lady in the room.

My reception half an hour ago had been gracious enough. "So good of you to come Mr Killjoy!" Lady Dawlish had simpered. "You need be as amusing as possible to-day, and shall I introduce you?"—but of course you know everyone in the room

I then shook hands with Sybil, and bowed across the piano to Arminta and Olivia. The damsels returned to my respectful salutation inclinations of their heads, as if they wished to be civil, but could not and went on with their gossip

A Herr somebody had strummed a sonata on the grand piano, and a little simpering French woman had sung a Parisian love song with much ah, and go I had swallowed three cups of tea, not that I was thirsty but for want of something to do and every one was anxious to see the Patagonians

Presently Lady Millicent arrived, exquisitely decorated by Worth Sir Owen Grubbing Grub followed, and talked as fast as a cataract

Dear Lady Dawlish so kind of you to give us this treat said the little woman as I moved around the room, and secluded myself in her elevation But she soon did in a lower key Then horribly disappointed—he seems quite civilize I suppose imagine

"Hush!" whispered Lady Dawlish and I took her aside

I could see that the Millicent charge Sybil had come to see a Patagonian, and, as I was the only outsider in the room, she had very naturally taken me for the interesting object of her visit. The idea was ludicrous but amusing, I felt humbled and began to wish myself in the smoking-room of the Germain Park street was after all by no means a pleasant place to pass a winter

Presently, Sybil advanced and made herself pleasant. She is not an attractive girl she has full gray eyes and a figure which might be called graceful but for a certain inflexibility of outline which shows itself even through her morning toilet I once heard a man say that the Honorable Sybil had many good points, I began to realize that she had too many

On the other hand she has that indescribable air of good breeding which does not reveal itself in the selection of words which are generally commonplace enough, but in their intonation and easy delivery will which they are uttered

"Been flirting to-day Mr. Killjoy" asked she winning, sinking gracefully into a seat

Now the fact is, that I do not slowly and easily to advantage on horseback Not that I am a skilful and energetic rider, but it is as pleased Pres to be during the half dozen times I have ridden rotundity to my pony spontaneously will I have a keen sense of the ridiculous I do not find the Park

"No Miss Dawlish, I was rather bitterly employed"

"Oh, yes! playing poor"

"No, writing"

"Oh! indeed

Then, wishing to give her curiosity a little importance I added, I was writing a book Another novel!

"I didn't know you were clever" said she "How clever" Ah! Miss Sybil turn aside to conceal a yawn as I thought It is after the yawn comes the blush she looks more lovely in the Sir Joshua Worcestershire manner of Reynolds

All the earth, earth, earth, Sweet Spring, full of sweet days and roses, A box of earth for a hundred loves and graces, A hundred Graces and Loves to water and to tend, Till Broughton's flesh be as white as the whitest of her lilies, and her cheeks as red as the reddest of her roses, Then, Broughton, then, set her before the world, Here is a creature to love, Here is a creature to worship
